Robusta vs. Arabica Coffee is the common term for the Coffea botanical genus comprising over 120 individual species

It grows in tropical forests in what is known as the coffee belt located between 25 degrees North and 30 degrees South of the equator and grows best in rich soil with mild temperatures consistent and frequent rain and shade. Commercially grown coffee is Antilles in 1723 disputed 1720

He believed he was bringing the New World's first coffee and is often credited as the source of all American Coffea arabica var. Typica. It's a fun story which raises questions about what constitutes fact and fiction as our only source for most of the information is in the overtly hyperbolic 2

Genetic diversity of Coffea arabica L. around 124 species most of them are diploids $2n = 2x = 22$. The only allotetraploid is C. arabica with $2n = 44$. C. arabica is the only self-fertile among the other cultivated species

This species is genetically less diverse when compared to the diploid species [14, 15] a situation that has been assumed. There are dozens of widely cultivated Arabica and Robusta coffee varieties around the world and each is unique in its performance and adaptation to local conditions

This catalog brings urgently needed information to coffee farmers to help them decide which coffee is best for their situation. The impact of biennial production is anticipated to drive the outlook for Arabica which is projected to increase by 4.6% to 98.6 million bags in coffee year 2022/23 following a 7.2% decrease in the previous coffee year. Here we present chromosome level assemblies of C. arabica and representatives of its progenitor species C. canephora and C. eugenioides hereafter Eugeniodes. Intercropping C. arabica is often intercropped with food crops such as corn, beans, or rice during the first few years.
