A kindly gent borrowed me a pair of Blue Jeans LC1 RCA cables and I wanted to share my thoughts. Especially since many here hold them in high regard. My review will be some what backwards. First let me state that if all I had was $35.00 give or take BJC is a no brainer

They have actually some of the best build of any cable I ve had. They also excel and hold their own with more expensive Nov 4 2009 Thanks for the feedback IBSTORMIN well done. Good to see people with a completely open mind towards both cheap and expensive connectors

If you do further testing perhaps have your wife reverse the cables to the other inputs without your knowing at what point in the comparison that she does this and see if you still can identify the Blue Jeans as sounding both different and better of May 6 2009 I followed the advice given in another thread in this forum to go with Blue Jeans Cable to obtain all of the HDMI and speaker cables I would need for my new HTS

Unfortunately the holes inside the terminals for the Take 5 Classic speakers are too small to insert locking banana plugs into them. Is there some sort of banana to pin adapter out there that would have a better chance of fitting the May 1 2009 BS aside they are the same with a small caveat

If you visit the Blue Jeans Cable site you will see they offer composite video cable digital coax cable and component interconnects that all use the same Belden 1694A cable and Canare RCAPs connectors

The caveat is that unshield cables which adequate for sound frequency analog interconnects might not have enough protection against EMI RFI I followed the advice given in another thread in this forum to go with Blue Jeans Cable to obtain all of the HDMI and speaker cables I would need for my new HTS

Is there some sort of banana to pin adapter out there that would have a better chance of fitting the Earlier this year I gave him my Blue Jeans Cable Belden 10g speaker cables when I purchased a used pair of Acoustic Zen Satori cables

So he asked me how the AZ cables had improved the sound and was it worth the upgrade. I hemmed and said I was happy

But I paid $25 for the BJC bare ends and $450 for the AZ cables Most people with receivers and good speakers but not necessarily multi thousand dollar units will need good cable like blue jeans for example but would they have the equipment to tell the difference between that and mega dollar MIT stuff it would be doubtful
