Jan 22 2025 Rain itself will rarely even delay a flight let alone cancel it

While the weather is a crucial factor regarding when or if a flight gets canceled rainy weather is typically not a factor Jan 16 2025 While rain alone rarely cancels flights it can lead to delays if combined with strong winds storms or poor visibility

Check real time flight status and airline policies for possible rebooking options Nov 27 2023 If you're short on time here's a quick answer Rain can delay flights due to reduced visibility slick runways and overall unsafe conditions for takeoff and landing

Delays tend to be short but could lengthen if the storm is severe Nov 27 2024 But when you arrive at the airport there it is displayed on the departure board the flights been canceled. What's worse that same screen shows flights on other airlines to your destination that are still operating

To the average traveler the seemingly random nature of these decisions is perplexing. Yes rain can impact flight takeoffs leading to delays or cancellations if conditions become hazardous due to limited visibility and wet runways

However when rain affects flights Air Traffic Control ATC can authorize the pilot to land if they feel the conditions are favorable for landing Jul 10 2025 Rain can cause flight delays mainly because it reduces visibility and makes runways slippery

While modern aircraft can manage rain heavy precipitation may require slower taxiing or increased distance between planes Aug 18 2023 Fortunately rain by itself very rarely delays flights though if other weather conditions like thunderstorms are present it's possible that a flight can be delayed. Light to moderate rain rarely causes flight cancellations but can lead to delays due to reduced visibility and slower ground operations

Heavy rain combined with thunderstorms significantly increases the likelihood of flight cancellations due to safety concerns and operational limitations Apr 11 2023 It's a common myth that airlines are never responsible for weather related delays or cancellations

While it's true that no one can control the weather not all weather disruptions qualify as extraordinary circumstances under DOT or US regulations Mar 4 2023 Contrary to popular belief rain rarely delays flights. In fact most commercial jets are designed to take off and land in the rain

However severe weather conditions like thunderstorms lightning hail high winds
