The following flowchart illustrates the decision making process for usingactionthresholdsinweedmanagement Set anactionthreshold a point at which pest weedpopulations indicate that pest weedcontrolaction must be taken a treatment is justified only if the benefits of control is greater than the cost of control The number of pests or level of damage beyond which management action should be taken is known as theactionthreshold a fundamental concept in integrated pest management Sep 2 2025 Before taking any pestcontrolaction IPM first sets anactionthreshold a point at which pest populations or environmental conditions indicate that pestcontrolactionmust be taken Jan 13 2024 Actionthresholdsin IPM are predetermined levels of pest populations or damage at which control measures should be considered

They are used to guide decisions on whether or not to intervene as not all pests or levels of infestation warrantcontrolactions Tolerance levels oractionthresholdscan be developed for agricultural crops by studying the effect of an insect or pathogen orweedon the ultimate yield of the crop

These studies look at several different population densities and measure the ultimate yield If pest populations threaten plant health become a nuisance or aesthetically intolerable theactionthresholdmay have been exceeded and suppression tactics should be implemented by using IPM practices either alone or in combination

The important thing to remember here is that there is no such thing as an insect free landscape.
