In the arctic mirage a distant object appears right way up but higher up than the actual location. Though arctic and desert mirages seem to be quite different they share a common fundamental cause

It is that light rays passing from an object through air to an observer always refract bend in the direction of increasing air density Even when the air is stagnant there is enough air movement to cause the mirage images to come and go rapidly

Unfortunately the same layering that gives us glorious mirages compounds the severe air pollution problem in the Fairbanks area Mar 2 1995 Is the Great One a grand illusion? Is the tallest mountain in North America a mirage? A friend recently told me that the Mount McKinley we see as a huge lump on the southwest Fairbanks horizon is actually an impostor an optical illusion that really isn't there

She said that because of the curvature of the Earth we shouldn't be able to see the mountain from Fairbanks or from Anchorage. Her The fate morgana mirage is one that can occur only where there are alternating warm and cold layers of air near the ground or water surface

Instead of traveling straight through these layers light is bent towards the colder hence denser air. The result can be a rather complicated light path and a strange image of a distant object

A fate morgana actually is a superposition of several The Harrier is fairly bulky intended primarily for ground support and does not have the fighter potential of the sleek Mirage. But it does not require long runways on which to take off or land and can even hover like a helicopter

Performance alone probably will not decide the contest between these two aircraft Was this a mirage the northern lights or what? A possible explanation is the Parry arc named after the explorer W. E. Parry who first reported seeing the phenomenon while searching for a northwest passage in 1819 1820

The Parry arc is actually moonlight or sunlight deflected by passing through elongated airborne ice crystals Fireball meteors auroras noctilucent clouds mirage phenomena atmospheric dust city lights reflected from clouds earthquake lights lightning forest fires ice crystals and raindrops in the air plus a host of other phenomena can create strange effects The Arctic mirage is a different story altogether

During inversion conditions in the Tanana Valley there is a layer of dense cold air next to the ground with warmer air overlying it
