Jul 2 2015 A DSc is a doctorate in science and is not awarded for literature law divinity or music each of which has its own dedicated higher doctorate. The DSc is a higher doctorate than a PhD in England Apr 2 2016 The meaning of a DSc degree almost certainly varies by country

In my experience in the commonwealth i.e. UK Australia New Zealand it is an honorary degree. That means you don't pursue it it isn't attained by being a student. It's more of a lifetime achievement award you get it as a result of a long and successful career in science

The usual course is that you get a PhD first Aug 1 2018 The meaning of these degrees vary by country. In some countries especially in Europe PhD is the basic degree. It's the one you get out of graduate school. D

Litt aka. Doctor of Letters and D.Sc Doctor of Science are the highest conferred degrees. You need sustained achievement at the top before these are awarded. Here's a quote from the Wikipedia article on D

Litt The Litt.D Sep 8 2018 The answers and comments to this question along with the wikipedia entry suggest that the DTech degree is higher than a PhD in the UK. This is the first time I've heard of an academic certificate Oct 8 2015 I saw a job posting that says PhD or equivalent required

What is meant by equivalent? What can be an equivalent for PhD? Expertise gained through work experience and publications? Dec 17 2014 While all these degrees fall under the category of Master of Science there are technical differences in the course content

In general you should always refer to your degree by its actual title abbreviation. If you think someone might not know what an abbreviation is e.g

on your CV or something you could add a brief note such as MS US Master's but I'm not sure how useful this really is Dec 24 2017 I just received my passing grades for my last remaining courses for my BSc

I've completed all my requirements but the next convocation ceremonies don't take place until Summer 2018. Likewise I Mar 18 2024 I am an associate professor in computer science. I see a lot of academics with titles like FBCS CEng FRSE FIET FREng

I was wondering what's the tangible benefit of these titles? I know that Does your country have any academic degrees after the PhD? If yes what is it called and how graduating this degree? Additionally what is a Post Doc? Is it a degree or something else? I have seen When writing letter to an academic professor not necessarily from student to professor what is the appropriate way to address his
