May 28 2020 The text specifically says Shove is a special melee attack Is this a case of specific beats general where the specific wording of Shove makes it an attack even though the general definition of an attack is different?

Alternatively is the wording of shove just using common language or is it intended to mean something different? Jan 15 2016 For example the shield mastery feat gives the option to shove an adjacent creature 5ft as a bonus action

Could you make an Opportunity Attack on the creature because it leaves your threat range w Apr 26 2025 In other cases Shove or Grapple the target creature makes a saving throw now instead. There is no mention of an attack roll for the Grapple or Shove options

In particular can you use shove on a creature 10 away? The shove description says Using the Attack action you can Oct 30 2018 The shove is not counted in the rules as weapon attacks they are special melee attacks

Using the Attack action you can make a special melee attack to shove a creature either to knock it prone or push it away from you Nov 18 2018 The Move + Shove scenario As a side note I would like to address this statement In other words the player's running momentum is completely decoupled from the shove and gives them no advantage
