Feb 2 2011 The free form shaped stone on the left is usually a Navajo made giveaway. Plus coral and turquoise is found made by both Navajo Zuni artists but definitely favored to the Navajo. Zuni left Navajo right

The Navajo piece is easy to identify big heavy and a nice free form shaped stone Jul 7 2025 Heres a link that talks about the turquoise durango silver Lander Blue Spiderweb Turquoise Cabochons Durango Silver Company Learn about the elusive Lander Blue Turquoise and Lander Blue Spiderweb Turquoise cabochons with photo examples of genuine Lander Blue Turquoise from the Mary Louise Lode Claim Oct 12 2025 Turquoise and variscite are closely related but chemically different

Variscite does not contain copper which gives turquoise its characteristic blue-green color. I don't know of a definitive way to visually tell the difference

I have a cuff purchased around 30 years ago stated to be Navajo Oct 15 2018 I found this chart depicting all kinds of block turquoise available to purchase

Always be aware of what you are buying! I found that gently tapping the stone against my teeth is a good test that I can do on site before purchasing without damaging the stone. Genuine turquoise will sound like glass when gently tapped against your tooth. Block will sound like plastic

It sounds like a Feb 3 2025 These are some random pieces of raw turquoise I have acquired no information on where they're from or even whether all of it is actually turquoise Aug 19 2025 Welcome to Turquoise People. I'm sorry but this is not turquoise

It looks like either Magnesite or Howlite 2 stones which are sometimes dyed to look like turquoise although these obviously are not dyed. Turquoise has a particular chemical composition and even though it may be a very pale blue it is not white.
