The Oxford English Dictionary dates yoo hoo to 1924 as noted by the American Dialect Society and compares it to yo ho originally a nautical phrase also sometimes used in yo heave ho

Their first documented use of yo ho is from 1769 in William Falconer s An universal dictionary of the marine Hola ho a cry which answers to yoe hoe. Yo ho derives from two interjections. Yo an exclamation of Sep 5 2015 It usually says yoo when it follows an unvoiced consonant b d p c f h t

As languages evolve both in pronunciation and dialect this rule is weakened somewhat however it does still hold true in the majority of cases Sep 2 2011 I think that any etymology of Yo! that goes back only a few hundred years is woefully incomplete and quite absurd

Yo! is used in more or less formal situations in East Asia China Japan India Dravidian languages Africa West and Central Africa the United States and Europe

That usage range puts it well beyond the purview of Indo European and suggests that its origins could lie May 5 2017 Its an interjection and like many other interjections its spelt in dozens of different ways. P.U

is not one Ive seen before and I doubt Id recognise it and pew has the disadvantage of being a word with a very different meaning. But pyewww pyuuuuuww pyeouwwgh and many other varieties are easily recognisable

Im not aware of any particularly established way of spelling it U is oo for nearly all American and a substantial number of British English speakers in most words when it falls in a stressed syllable after one of the following consonants l s z U is oo for most American speakers but yoo for most British speakers when it falls in a stressed syllable after one of the following consonants t d The pronunciation of Greek letters by scientists isn t very different from the pronunciation of the Greek letters in the respective countries American scientists pronounce them pretty much the same way the general American population does and so on

So your question is actually about why the English pronunciation of Greek letters and the answer is that it is based on but not always Apr 15 2014 First of all you can t say I give you a call. I gather you meant I will give you a call

As far as phone calls are concerned there is little if any difference in meaning or register. However the first sentence I will call you. is much more generic and without proper context may have meanings other than phone calls. For example when you read Go to your room
